

halftime report

Jerzy Balowski: Well, we're halfway through the show and it's time for a half time report. I think the show has been going particularly well. I particularly like how the young lad, Rick, has been going off the joke into the dead laugh area. Going into the international sphere, they're going to have to face some stiff competition especially from the Swedes with their comedy series "Ooh, Where's My Volvo?" and also, of course, from the French with their comedy series, "Mr. Poo Poo Goes to the Lavatory". Anyway, the half time's over now and it's back to the action.

well, we're halfway through the show and it's time for the halftime report time to reevaluate the strategies for dominating this our chosen sport the first half is in the books now things are going particularly well some things didn't work out quite like we hoped just gonna have to leave those things where they fell the referee seems to be a bit biased and several injuries have taken their toll but still we've managed to excel up to this point even though all those pesky factors played a role the second half will be the same except better we won't make any of the same mistakes twice we know exactly what we're gonna have to do better and we have some secret sources giving us advice this should springboard us onward in the season there's stiff competition on the international scene/sphere the swedes will be singing that modern nordiskmusik the french with the chant du fromage ringing in their ears now we've rehydrated and re-electrolyted it's time to take the field once again with some massages and some undetectable substances and a rousing version of we are the champions and we're halfway through the month and this has been the halftime report there's plenty of time for more miracles but what's left of the month is twice as short time to dominate this our chosen sport
